COURSE DESCRIPTION

Chimeric Antigen Receptor (CAR) T-Cell therapy represents a novel therapeutic approach which differs considerably from conventional management strategies. CAR T-Cell experts agree that knowledge of this unique approach among healthcare professionals is low in this rapidly-evolving clinical environment. Consequently, there is an educational need to address knowledge and competence gaps among physicians regarding clinical data, treatment indications, and adverse events associated with CAR T-Cell therapies.

It is critical that clinicians managing patients with acute leukemia and other hematologic malignancies are cognizant of relevant clinical updates and are also able to integrate recent progress into routine clinical management of these patients. However, given the overwhelming influx of data, many hematology professionals face difficulties in identifying the most relevant findings for clinical practice. Hematologists are unable to stay abreast of the latest evidence on investigational agents, thus educational programs are crucial to address these important professional practice gaps.

CAR T-Cell ("Living Drug") immunotherapy is showing promising results in the treatment of cancers. University of Chicago faculty, along with national and international experts, will discuss the clinical and translational aspects of cell therapies both for hematologic malignancies and solid tumors.

This collaborative conference aims to make safe and cost-effective therapies a reality for patients globally in a cancer-free world.

LEARNING OBJECTIVES

- Identify the current indications for CAR T-Cell therapy in cancer, including acute lymphoblastic leukemia and aggressive large B-cell lymphoma;
- Understand the grading and management of CAR T-Cell related toxicities including cytokine-release syndrome and neurologic toxicity;
- Identify novel targets and future directions in cellular therapy;
- Describe current approaches in nursing and supportive care for patients undergoing CAR T-Cell therapy;
- Discuss how the uses of CAR T-Cell therapy differ in pediatric and young adult patients.

TARGET AUDIENCE

This activity is designed for medical oncologists and oncology fellows, basic scientists, research fellows, nurses, clinical trial research staff, immunologists, surgeons, and other healthcare professionals interested in tumor immunology and immunotherapy.

PHYSICIAN CREDIT

The University of Chicago Pritzker School of Medicine is accredited by the Accreditation Council for Continuing Medical Education to provide continuing medical education for physicians.

The University of Chicago Pritzker School of Medicine designates this live activity for a maximum of 5.75 AMA PRA Category 1 Credits™. Physicians should claim only the credit commensurate with the extent of their participation in the activity.
